Guidelines for Identifying Slow & Advanced Learners

Rationale:	One of the objectives of education is to augment the competencies that a learner can achieve through systems of knowledge. The level of learning is a key issue in instructional design and it also determines multiple pathways for student growth. It may not be practicable to adopt a learning strategy that fits all, prior to an assessment of the students' level of readiness. We should therefore develop and embrace a framework that makes the learning objectives visible to students and increases their levels of understanding. It is also important to reveal these levels of learning to students, create learning menus and label their abilities to facilitate their advancement and holistic development. Teaching at the right level and assessing the requirements of students is thus a prerequisite in effective learning management. According to the priorities assessed by the NAAC Peer Team, our Slow &amp; Advanced Learners identification mechanism needs to be more robust. We need to develop a strategy that is based on continuous evaluation and summative assessments that embrace all levels of understanding. In fact, we need to create an evaluation interface that enables both the teacher and the student to have a clear picture of student learning at the end of a specific unit of instruction.
Proposed framework:	1) As proposed by the IQAC and as discussed in the meeting of the Academic Committee held on 29.04.2022, besides the Internal Assessment mechanism, a separate evaluation strategy for the stratification of slow and advanced learners will be adopted. The initial segregation of learners will be based on an evaluative test of 20 marks containing 10 questions of 2 marks each that will vary in their level of hardness. This question paper will include questions from all the Core Course papers that the student is being taught in the semester. 6 questions out of these 10 will be moderately hard, and the 4 remaining questions will demand the application of advanced knowledge and skills on the part of the learner.

- 2) The initial evaluation will help us segregate the students into two groups, following which we would adopt the strategy of continuous evaluation. At the end of each month, an evaluative test based on the original design will be administered to students and their progress will be systematically mapped and recorded.
- 3) The fundamental idea is to facilitate the progression of the students across the different levels of learning. Teachers should therefore make efforts to help the slow learners cross over to the category of advanced learners. This progression data will also be monitored in due course.
- 4) Some departments may express their intention to frame test designs that involve subjective answer writing. If discipline-specific requirements necessitate evaluative tests containing descriptive answer type questions, then the quantum of marks should vary. Any evaluative test containing descriptive questions should be ideally of 40 marks and should contain 8 questions of 5 marks each. Out of these 5 questions should be moderately hard and 3 questions should be relatively harder.
- 5) It is advisable that all departments follow one unique strategy throughout the entire evaluation procedure. They should not therefore toggle between the objective and descriptive modes of test framing.
